Bahamas Bridal Show is “The One for You”

Hello brides and grooms,

We’re delighted that you’ve decided to take the leap into a marriage relationship.

As you plan your wedding celebration, we invite you to consider giving some of your business to the wonderful wedding and home suppliers that have gathered at this event to offer you their products, services and share their expertise.

This event will continue to be successful only when you patronize businesses who are investing their life’s saving and hearts and souls to impress you to become new clients.

We encourage you to set a reasonable budget and to shop at home with Bahamas-based companies that are dedicated to earning your business and to improve our country’s economy. This is the basis for this show.

We’re grateful for the participation of all exhibitors, their staff and the many persons who volunteer to make the show a success. We appreciate your support.

Sincerely,

*Tommy Stubbs,
Executive Producer
Bahamas Bridal Show*

Bridal gowns for entire wedding party

Clothing by BUTTONS
Bridal & Formal Wear

Picture by
AF Photography

Your wedding gown is something you will remember for the rest of your life...and should make you feel and look good. After all, you are the center of attention! The same could be said about gowns for your entire bridal party.

For many brides-to-be, price is the biggest factor in determining which gowns to wear. For some, style is key to making a purchase. As for others, it is pure emotion!

Either way, you need to make smart, educated decisions about the gowns for you and your bridal party. By establishing guidelines and a set of priorities, you can make your search for the perfect gowns a lot easier.

The most important questions are:

What kind of wedding is planned?

The styles you choose will depend on the formality and style of the wedding itself. Typically, the more formal the wedding, the more formal your gowns should be for you, the bride, bridesmaids, flower girl and ushers.

What is your wedding date?

The wedding date is critical since some fabrics and styles are seasonally and some gowns might not be comfortable for the weather temperature at the time of your wedding.

Many gowns are special orders and require much as four months for delivery. Even if you purchase gowns that are ready for immediate shipment, it may still require time for alterations.

How much can you spend?

Establish how much you have to spend on your wedding gown and have an idea on how much your bridal party members, including bridesmaids, flower girls and ushers, can afford for their gowns. They will need to purchase accessories, such as headpieces, shoes, gloves, jewelry, hair-styling. The package could average $650.

The average price brides are willing to spend on a wedding gown is $2,500. Add headpiece, veil, shoes, jewelry hair-styling and the price will easily exceed $5,000 for the bride's complete attire.

Meet with a bridal consultant who could assist you with selections and budget.

Gifts for home sweet home...

Choosing a bridal registry will certainly help take the guesswork out of receiving wedding gifts. Discuss your preferences with an experienced registry consultant when you're ready to make selections. Sign up with a registry at least three months before the wedding.

While department stores are most recognized for gift selections, realty companies, and furniture and appliance stores are now offering similar services. Registries will also keep a list of what your guests have purchased for you. That way, you will be able to follow-up with a Thank You note.

Here comes the groom...

The bride has and will always be the focus point of a wedding celebration. But he comes the groom!

There are so many fabulous choices in men's formal wear. Even though tuxedos aren't the only option on the cutting table from which to choose, they are THE favourite choice for weddings.

Almost every couple wants to look and feel like royalty, and willing to spend a little more to achieve their desire. Don't be surprised to see groomsmen spending more on their attire than bridesmaids do.

While black and navy blue appear to be the standard of formal wear, a contemporary groom has let loose from the traditional groom. Men are wearing tight-fitting, single-breasted jackets with one or two buttons, and slim-fit trousers that aren't tapered at the ankle.

Don't look now, but double-breasted jackets are back. Scissor-tails are taking a back seat for now, but are always ready for special-theme weddings.

Even though an admiration of the classic style still exist, grooms can wear a variety of tux colours, regardless of the time of year. Spring, summer or fall, any colour will do: purple, aqua, royal blue, pink, and green in either earth tones or brighter shades.

When selecting tuxedos (or special designed suits), it's important to match the accessories with the ladies' dress colours. The bride will make sure of that, though. She will insist on going with you to make selections.

Don't forget the shoes, laces or loafers in a variety of colours. And, without socks. If worn with socks, the colours are endless. And so are the colours for ties and vests.

On her wedding day, the bride will certainly wear the most expensive or amazing dress she's ever worn. But the groom will get some attention of his own - with his groomsmen.

Wedding Etiquette for Your Guests

As soon as guests receive an invitation to your wedding, the phone calls and emails will begin. Guests will treat you like their personal concierge, with questions about transportation, accommodations, and even ask questions related to the planning of your wedding.

Sending RSVPs

Anyone who has ever planned a wedding knows the importance of a punctual RSVP (it's a French term, meaning "repondez, s'il vous plait."). In plain English, RSVP means to reply by the deadline indicated on the invitation. Before giving your caterer a final head count, you need to know who will attend.

A week after the deadline, it's time to make phone calls to those who have failed to respond. Recruit a reliable person to help you with this task or send a group email (use a blind CC) advising that you need to know if they're planning on attending. Call those who do not reply to the email.

Put the reply-by-date as early as possible. When your guests see the deadline is quickly approaching, hopefully they will reply in a timely manner.

Sending RSVPs with Extra Guests

The good news is that some guests will return the RSVP to beat the deadline. The bad news is, they will be attending with others you never invited or persons you never heard of. Every invitation does not bestow the right to bring a date or a child.

To avoid any hard feelings, establish in advance a no-exceptions guest list policy, such as "significant others" only if engaged or no children under 18.

Address your invitations exactly what you mean. Never write "Johnson Family." The Johnson family might be larger than you ever imagined.

Who Pay$ for the Wedding?

There will be much confusion as to who is responsible for what expenses when planning a wedding. To ease some tension, below is a summary of what each family may wish to pay:

The Bride & Her Family:

- Groom's wedding band and gift

- Photography, videography, entertainment
- Transportation for bridal party
- Formal wear for her father
- Her gown and accessories
- Invitations and other printed items
- Wedding cake and rental items
- Gift for bride and groom

The Groom & His Family:

- Engagement ring and wedding band
- Bride's bouquet and going-away corsage
- Corsages for both mothers & boutonnieres
- Honeymoon arrangements
- Other expenses they wish to assume, including shower/bachelorette party for bride.
- Marriage license and clergy's fees
- Rehearsal dinner
- Gift for bride and groom
- Formal wear for his father

Prepare a Wedding Budget

A budget is most essential in planning a wedding. Without it, you are destined to have crisis or ruin relationships, even before the celebration begins.

It's important to sit down and carefully organize a reasonable budget prior to making any wedding arrangements. Once you're working with a budget, share specific information with your wedding suppliers so they can make appropriate recommendations in supplying your needs.

Below, write down what your budget will allow for the items, then note the actual cost for those items after getting confirmed quotes from suppliers. Try to stick to your budget - you will be happy in the end.
